SPRING

Snow's frigid expiration flings viciously
Upon Springtime's shyly lifted face, and I,
Sheltered by phantasmal forests wake
From chilled and solitary sleep:
Accession to the soft white hand
That beckons and lifts upward.
Yet silent multitudinous snow forms
Make suicidal leaps, to strike and die
Upon the living earth. And I,
Wet eyes upturned,
Examine an infinite of abandon . . .
And fall intoxicated upon the generating warmth,
In tearful reunion with the Lover-earth.
 Once again
To sip of red wine's chalice
And share the bread
 Of life.
