BE AGAIN

wondering why some people smile rocking slowly in their sunset chairs, the wound ones buzz along patterned path. soon they will pack up their chatter and speed away in that cartoon cloud, an irreverent clusterfuck retired and replaced without knowing for a moment what they've missed:

each is scenery to the other, only eaten up at separate speeds, strategically timed so that as one scrapes his dish of every detail to make room for the next, the other sips cool lemonade, savors the sky and smiles for the busy bee that has lost his sense of taste.
