Prayer of Bones and Rags

You made the windy nights that wail like a baby’s cry.
Sitting alone on the edge of the bed in a dark room watching the trees toss helpless arms above their shaking heads, the safely wholesome flesh that covers us in the day
is stripped away.
No one laughs
or eats
or says, “I’m fine.”
We’re all the bones of a sorrow so bare we dare not speak; the weeping, sobbing wind our voice.
You made the windy nights
that strip away our flesh leave it tattered in the gale we are bones and rags, contorting like the trees
so we cry
your name
we say, “who are you?”
and listen in the wind
for a reply.
