To a Doughnut

Oh dainty piece of pastry, Delicious though you taste,
I fear the man who made thee,
Did his job in haste.

Where's the extra would-be bite
That should be left to thee?
Tis but a silly slot,
A vacant hole I see.

Just think of all the dainty things Which might have filled your center; If only you had had A more extravagant inventor.

Allan McMillan

The provocative beat of a raindrop on a tin roof or the screaming of tires
on a dry pavement
filled in with the flow of a breeze behind a drawn shade
mix a solo of sneakered feet padding their way to love
along with crazy birds
in golden trees
mix
a
an
you got
the spring
combo.
