he was a small person

Not that his body was little, oh no his head plus his neck plus his trunk plus his legs was more than enough for his purposes. He was just a boss little shorter than his and a little taller than his subordinates.

Not that his right arm wasn’t plenty long enough to reach all the way over his symmetrically arranged desk top of wife picture balanced by company calendar to hefty clutch your extended hand in a personnel perfect handshake

Not that he was too small to get on the nice big incubator-comfortable company jet all by himself and appear (at least from the back) fully .008% crucial to the existence of Mother Factory

Not that any of the wingtipped nostrillaughers who endured coffee, tea, coke, smoke, milk, and lunch breaks with him thought of him as non-group-oriented

Not that anything he said was ever insulting, controversial, clever, significant,
or human

it’s just that he was a small person
