Untitled

Nancy Cuminale
St. John Fisher College

Follow this and additional works at: https://fisherpub.sjfc.edu/angle

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

How has open access to Fisher Digital Publications benefited you?

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://fisherpub.sjfc.edu/angle/vol1979/iss1/17

This document is posted at https://fisherpub.sjfc.edu/angle/vol1979/iss1/17 and is brought to you for free and open access by Fisher Digital Publications at St. John Fisher College. For more information, please contact fisherpub@sjfc.edu.
Untitled

Cover Page Footnote
Appeared in the issue: Spring 1979.

This poem is available in The Angle: https://fisherpub.sjfc.edu/angle/vol1979/iss1/17 I could hear your voice drawling into the phone your mouth half-forming words with the difficulty of a two year old and through the (however many) miles that exist between here and L.A.
I could see your body half-slumped over in a phone booth on a corner somewhere probably next to the Seven-Eleven store or under the Hertz Rent-A-Car sign blindly pressing buttons till my voice was at your ear pleading with you to confess whatever foreign problems you really didn’t want me to know but you say the money is good so nothing else matters (as) your solitary secret creeps over the wires silently
I know you are inventing conversations again painting pictures of your grand illusion (that’s you) your loneliness is killing you your motorbike is smashed to pieces and my face is scarring your common sense moments of hot silence I wait listening for your voice to explode into the wires in another round of pleas for my trust but the silence grows longer and cools with your madness withering with the reality of an operator’s monotone you breathe deep and as if the cool evening air has cured you say goodbye bleeding endless illusions of strength over the wires

—Nancy Cuminale