Moon Gazer

His mighty vessel bobs furiously
Like an eggshell fallen in frothy dishwater.
Forgotten windchimes sound
The alarm of the impending storm.

Waves smash against the shore,
Grinding ancient rock to sand.
Wind buffets the army of trees Keeping vigil at the beach.

The surf roars, sending white caps
To the surface, striving toward the firmament.
Clouds boil, creating pandemonium
In the Abode of the Gods.

The opaline scimitar slices through Sapphire mists
Unveiling, revealing the course.
Phoebe guides the ship with her crescent beam.

Sailing in the wake of the tempest, Skimming over waves quelled
By the lunar goddess, he voyages
To Macedonia's mythical mountain.

The captain steers his vessel in a reverie,
The thread of a vision unraveling
As she beckons to him From her aerie amidst the star.

van gogh

i stare expecting to see the blank face of a man
self-defined by his palette and brushes on a taut canvas

i imagine your tormented thoughts translucent perception lash out against an opaque reality tainted reconciliation captured in your portrait

looking closer i observe the spectrum of your shaded emotions quick brush strokes
a precarious balance hope and doom
the search and the discovery
in your solemn eyes
