Candlelight ii.

Cover Page Footnote
candles
(a poem for Ginny & Mark) leaning
into your lap
I am a pool
of wax
melting
in our light
we flow into one another
blending
as one shade
of meaning
neither of us
alone
could imagine
a softening
of hues
a vibrance begun
to surface
and glow
to shed our light
on another
candles

Kathy Murphy

Candlelight i.
Looking into the flame
growing thin,
a beam pierces
the eye
and glows,
shines
and illuminates
the emptiness
lying inside.

Candlelight ii.
I should like to be a candlelight that never dies in flame.
A pure and simple simile mutability puts to shame.
No matter how long the length may be,
light marks the learned wick, Which burns the candle's permanence away, a deceptive nature's trick.
