Candlelight i.

Looking into the flame
growing thin,
a beam pierces
the eye
and glows,
shines
and illuminates
the emptiness
lying inside.

Candlelight ii.

I should like to be a candlelight that never dies in flame.
A pure and simple simile mutability puts to shame.
No matter how long the length may be,
light marks the learned wick,
Which burns the candle’s permanence away,
a deceptive nature’s trick.
