A friendship that began on the unfamiliar floors of a freshman dorm. Two people with the same doubts and fears become friends. However, as their doubts, fears, and hopes changed, so did their friendship. It lost its charm of innocence and care. It became spiteful and mean.

A friendship that lasted only through convenience,
And the super ability of each to bask in the inadequacies of the other.
Feelings that have become false, and although noticed the words have not been uttered. The laughter is no longer, but strained with the echoes of hurtful words and cold stares.
And they appear to be friends.

Why?
To soothe their minds or they may have some new fears that cause them to cling
Even if the feelings are unpleasant.
Years later the place will still be unfamiliar.
Their new way has meant the creation of a new world that they must step into.
Although they part, the friendship has not been officially broken.
The letters will come.
They won't mean anything.
They will say nothing and the story will remain unchanged.
The floor becomes even harder, and colder, and unfamiliar
And they must exist alone.
