It is not
Who am I
But who I have become because of it.

Remembering
long, lazy afternoons one stretching into the next Macaroni and cheese concoction on the stove forgetting about it, then
remembering
lying down on earthly tones, plush against my flesh
being alone and turning the pages of someone else's life
Remembering
The smells of summer
Humidity running down my cheek
The tender breeze laughing Peaceful days watching cars whiz by from my windowsill past the cobblestone that contained my happiness.

Moving on A new beginning leaving old days
behind
But, never forgetting
me

— Heather Ruffalo
It is not
Who am I
But who I have become
because of it.
Remembering
Jong, lazy afternoons one stretching into the next Macaroni and cheese concoction on the stove
forgetting about it, then remembering about it, then lying down on earthy tones, plush Remembering
The smells of summer
Humidity running down my cheek
The tender breeze laughing
Remembering
Moving on A new beginning
behind
But, never forgetting
me
