Before We Were Snakes We Were Ants

their thick squinted eyes glaze
raw mold colored film
to show us
they are ready to leave

skin like a rice paper origami folding of everything but their four bleached
rattles
we shake the dirt
from our black
black
eyes
and turn right side up into this shed cylinder of museum for our little pieces of soul to meander
read diamond back walls like scaled cave painting telling in hieroglyphic chains along the fresh shell
of head
when we too
will have wet sappy tongues and
sleep with our cold torsos
in rock solid
sun

Untitled

In the silence of night.
I swallow her words like water
As a desperate man trapped in the burning sun.
Her words, soft and clear like a babbling brook.

I want to hold her against me Like I hold the last precious breath of air Before my eyes droop close for eternity.

As we wait, she holds my hand.
A heavy, callused log compared to a velvet rose.
Tears flow from her eyes like a flooding dam.

Whispering, I reach to touch the coarseness of her hair.
I let my hands quiver over the softness of her lips
And then they rest at her cheek.
Tears seep through the thickness of my fingers.

I feel the touch of a hand
As it guides my eyes closed And my spirit to a higher level.

But before my eyes close I watch as she falls to her knees Desperately pleading the hand to let go.

I hear her scream love
I hear her praise love
I hear her whisper love
And then I hear no more.
