Jamaican Diver

Monica Hopkins
St. John Fisher College

Follow this and additional works at: https://fisherpub.sjfc.edu/angle

Part of the Creative Writing Commons

How has open access to Fisher Digital Publications benefited you?

Recommended Citation
Available at: https://fisherpub.sjfc.edu/angle/vol2001/iss1/10

This document is posted at https://fisherpub.sjfc.edu/angle/vol2001/iss1/10 and is brought to you for free and open access by Fisher Digital Publications at St. John Fisher College. For more information, please contact fisherpub@sjfc.edu.
Jamaican Diver

Cover Page Footnote
Appeared in the issue: November 2000.

This poem is available in The Angle: https://fisherpub.sjfc.edu/angle/vol2001/iss1/10
MONICA HOPKINS

Jamaican Diver

He stands quietly, at the rear of the glass-bottom boat, balancing himself without the aid of a staff to steady him as the waves rock me to sickness.

In port, like a tourist
I peer over the boat's edge to catch a glimpse of the tropical fish, I'm afraid to swim with and lose my sunglasses unexpectedly one hand anchoring myself to the boat, the other extends to the water, outstretched fingers frantically try to make contact but fall short as my glasses drift to the sandy bed thirty feet below where we are anchored.

He comes to my aid, after a half-joking request for a diver to retrieve my lost bit of property.

As he peels of his shirt, and fits himself with a mask, I catch a glimpse of fear in his eyes before nervously inhaling as much air as his lungs would permit. I watch him plunge into the glassy water with the urgency and importance of a man diving for pearls, thinking he may not ever resurface.

I wait in awe of his gesture of hospitality and concern and think that I do not know any American boys who would go to such lengths for sunglasses,
or even for me.
Instead they'd pull out the credit card or checkbook and offer to buy me a new pair.

Such is the American way.

With thankfulness I finally see his figure grow before me as he makes his ascent back to the boat.
Gasping for breath,
wet with saltwater
he climbs over the ledge
grasping my twelve dollar sunglasses
in his hands holding them up like a prize. He returns them to me with a smile
not wanted anything
in payment except to regain his lost breath and a moment's rest.

* * *

I remember the water dripping from his shoulder length dread locks and dark skin the color of truffles.
I can still see his eyes, white like pearls dark like onyx, and his shorts saturated with salt water, clinging to his muscular legs.

Yet, in spite of his great kindness,
as much as I pick my brain
I cannot recall his name.

Such is the American way.