The world outside glows with the radiance
Of tiny white crystals of destruction,
Falling from the place they reside
To their final destination.
They blind the eye and
Construct a wall of frustration,
Separating dreams from reality.
Lost in a moment,
One stumbles awake as these
Tiny soldiers march to battle,
Carrying out their duties of
Siege and conquering.
Men fall to these tiny beasts,
Unaware of their danger,
Sugar-coated in a thick layer of innocence.
