there we were, all of us,
faces raised to the sky freezing and strange. no, strangers. we were quiet wolves held captive by change yet stronger in our common cause:
our minds marvel at the universe, our hearts call out for its mothering.

or whichever name we'd learned as yours, but words turned to smoke as they flew out our mouths till the last of us retreated to his den.

maybe the cold drew its sword or maybe the warmth drew us in or maybe it's hard to see the insides of others.
